

Climate Science for Service Partnership Brazil

World-leading climate research that is advancing scientific understanding to help address the shared global challenge of climate change.

22
UK and Brazilian research organisations

>100
Research Scientists

>200
Researchers trained

156
Science papers published

6,690
Citations by global academics

>800,000
Publication viewings

>140,000
Publication downloads

2,350
News and media articles

209 citations in 160
Global policy documents

CSSP Brazil is part of the Weather and Climate Science for Service Partnership Programme which comprises projects to develop partnerships harnessing UK scientific expertise. The projects – supported by the UK Government’s International Science Partnerships Fund – aim to build the basis for strengthening the resilience of vulnerable communities to weather and climate variability.

