

Weather and Climate Science for Service Partnership India

World-leading research, advancing scientific understanding and modelling capabilities for services to protect lives and livelihoods around the world.

15

UK and India research organisations

>100

research scientists

86

Science papers published

1050

Citations by global academics

157,000

Publication viewings

>50

New models and model improvements developed

>30

New tools and datasets created

74

News articles and blogs citing project papers

490

Social media posts citing project papers

WCSSP India is part of the Weather and Climate Science for Service Partnership Programme which comprises projects to develop partnerships harnessing UK scientific expertise. The projects – supported by the UK Government’s International Science Partnerships Fund – aim to build the basis for strengthening the resilience of vulnerable communities to weather and climate variability.

